IDEV 4220 Humn Aspect Disastr/Emer (3)

The course will be administered in Geneva in partnership with the International Center for Health and Migration (ICMH). It will focus primarily on disaster relief and reconstruction. Individual lessons will address a variety of subtopics such as rapid assessment, psycho-social health, reproductive health, monitoring and evaluation, relief organizations, GIS, and communicable diseases.

IDEV 4230 Food Aid/Security Humani (3)

This course explores the dynamics of the use of food aid, the largest single component of humanitarian emergencies. The course will review policies that guide the use of food aid, as principal controversies surrounding the use of food aid in emergency and transition settings. It will also explore assessment techniques used to gauge the vulnerability of affected populations and their needs for food based interventions, and explore the food aid management system and its logistics.

IDEV 4280 Urban Res to Climate Change (3,4)

This course will explore the concept of resilience in urban communities in the context of the growing challenges presented by global climatic change. Using a multidisciplinary approach, students will address the political, economic, and environmental issues that urban populations will face with the increase of natural disasters and the decrease of available natural resources. Using case studies from around the world, students will explore pragmatic solutions and urban planning techniques to address current and future challenges.

IDEV 4300 Identity and Development (3)

A principal concern of many development theorists and practitioners today is the need to recognize differences. That means, fundamentally, respecting differences in identity and how one's identity or identities, such as gender, ethnicity, family structure, national origin, political affiliation, race, and religion play out in daily practice. The first section of the course provides historical and theoretical context for current discussions of identity as they relate to, affect and shape current international development theory and practice. The second section of the course examines cross-cutting issues where identity concerns intersect, with an emphasis on current trends and challenges, such as migration, violence, and urban change. Prerequisite(s): IDEV 3200 or PSDV 3200.

Prerequisite(s): IDEV 3200 or PSDV 3200.

IDEV 4320 Migrants Refugees & Development (3)

This course provides students with the opportunity to consider the implications of global population movements; 244 million in 2016, exclusive of internal migrants; and the events they reflect. We examine internal and external migration flows, their political, economic, social, cultural, and environmental causes and consequences. Moreover, we consider whether migrants may be an engine of development, a hindrance, or both. Success stories of migrant integration, upward mobility and thriving businesses go alongside with tales of discrimination, crowded slums and refugee camps where disease is rampant, education is scarce, and youth widen the ranks of the unemployed and revert to crime as a way of living and violence as a means of surviving. Based on migration theories and case studies, this course aims at understanding these patterns and exploring how the pace of migration may be slowed and conditions improved in order for migrant populations to better integrate their new societies and become positive agents of change. Prerequisite(s): ECON 1020 and IDEV 3200.

Prerequisite(s): ECON 1020 and IDEV 3200.

IDEV 4330 Post-Conflict Development (3)

The main objective of this course is to help students understand post-conflict development, in particular the rebalancing of unequal power relations through restorative and retributive justice. Determining the appropriate response to atrocities of gruesome scale, such as genocide and crimes against humanity, is one of the most difficult tasks scholars and policymakers have had to grapple within societies transitioning from conflict. Several case studies and a variety of transitional justice mechanisms are covered in the course, including truth and reconciliation commissions, reparations, ad-hoc criminal tribunals, the International Criminal Court, hybrid courts and domestic courts. The course ends by exposing tensions between the aim of justice and other crucial aims in post-conflict societies, including lasting peace, reconciliation, nation-building, poverty elimination, and gender and refugee issues, in order to familiarize students with the complexities of political development. Prerequisite(s): IDEV 1010 and 3200.

Prerequisite(s): IDEV 1010 and 3200.

IDEV 4560 Internship (1-3)

With the approval from the International Development Studies Program and the Center for Public Service, students can gain unique practical experiences and earn credit by engaging in a service-learning internship course. The internship program provides students the opportunity to bridge academic learning with service in the community. Internships foster professional development, promote practical application of knowledge acquired in the classroom, and encourage civic engagement. This course requires motivation, passion, and enthusiasm. Course may be repeated up to unlimited credit hours. Corequisite(s): SRVC 4890.

IDEV 4561 Environment & Development (3)

Developing countries face serious environmental challenges. Resource exploitation, rapid industrialization, disadvantageous trade and labor abuses are some of the potential consequences of unbalanced and non-sustainable development. Sustainable human development ensures that environmental stewardship accompanies concomitant progress in economic growth, responsive governance, social justice and healthy of the population. Sustainable development implies that resources are used widely, industrialization occurs without uncontrolled pollution and labor is engaged in production and trade practices that avoid exploitation. Global and local environmental problems and their root causes are discussed. Potential avoidance and mitigation measures are presented which may be implemented to guide a developing economy toward responsible and sustainable development. Prerequisite(s): IDEV 3200.

Prerequisite(s): IDEV 3200.

IDEV 4820 Urban Resilience Climate Chang (3)

This summer course will explore the concept of resilience in urban communities in the context of the growing challenges presented by global climatic change. Using a multidisciplinary approach, students will address the public health issues that urban populations will face and the increased mobilities they will use as a coping strategies with the increase of natural disasters and the decrease of available natural resources. Using case studies from around the world, students will explore pragmatic solutions and urban planning techniques to address current and future challenges.

IDEV 4900 Leadership & Mgmt Development (3)

"Leadership and Management for Development is a course designed for students who seek careers in International Development, working for international or non-governmental organizations, in the public or private sector, or aiming at starting their own social enterprise. Using a variety of case studies including recent economic and human development projects in Africa, Asia, Latin America and the United States, we explore the challenges of effective decision-making, policy formulation and implementation, as well as monitoring and evaluation, in the context of real world social, political, and financial constraints that regularly arise. Students are introduced to a strategic planning conceptual framework, which they use to create a sound and sustainable development project in the location and under an organization of their choice. IDEV 6640 Sustainable Human Development (3)IDEV 6670 Intl Pol Econ Relations (3)

In this new millennium of rapid change, globalization, and the privatization of international development, we seek to understand how political activity intersects with economic activity and how that nexus impacts the Global South. While the course title reads international political economy, we should acknowledge that global might be a more appropriate term, thereby including increasingly important non-state actors. Students use the concepts and theories of global political economy to analyze aid, trade, investment, development policy, monetary relations, and regional integration in order to understand how the world has worked in the past, is working now, and is likely to work in the future. Prerequisite(s): IDEV 3200 and ECON 1020.

Prerequisite(s): IDEV 3200 and ECON 1020.

IDEV 6680 Dev Theory&Strategy since 1945 (3)

The purpose of this course is to gain an in-depth understanding of the process of development since the end of World War II; what beliefs underlay various approaches, what structures and events influenced those beliefs, how governments and institutions responded, and how differing approaches have succeeded or failed. The following themes are examined decade by decade since the 1950s: development theories and strategies, international context for development, donor policy, development performance and trends. This is done on a global and regional scale, as well as through the prism of target developing countries selected by the students.
